Prepare to release your inner energy with ageLOC® Vitality.

Consumer Need

Vitality is the state of being strong and active with the power to live. Loss of physical vigour, reduced mental acuity and the lack of sexual drive are common signs of ageing - ultimately, what we call the loss of vitality. As we age or following an intensive period of activity, our energy levels can be impacted, which can affect our physical, mental and sexual vitality. In 2008, a Datamonitor survey revealed that 30 percent of consumers consistently felt tired and 50 percent reported that they felt tired sometimes.

Our mental sharpness could also be influenced. There are subtle changes in the way we think - it can take longer to solve problems and it becomes more difficult to make calculations, learn new skills, remember names or even find the car keys. Studies show that the average person experiences a major change in memory between the ages of 35 and 80.¹ Other research indicate that changes in mental health begins between the ages of 20 and 30.²

Studies also show that sexual drive declines with age. One study showed that 68 percent of women have a strong sexual drive around 30 to 35 years of age and this drops to only 23 percent (a 66 percent decline) for women approximately 65 to 74 years of age. Men in the same age groups showed a decline from 74 percent to only 47 percent (a 36 percent decline).³ Additional studies report an even more decline in sexual drive from individuals under 40 to individuals over 70 - only one percent of women and two percent of men over 70 reported high to very high interest in sex.^{4,5}

In today's society, quick energy boost products are often used to help with acute fatigue. These stimulant products can generate highs and lows and can become less effective over time as a person's vitality and energy levels continue to decline. By using these types of products, consumers are targeting a quick solution, while a more balanced and sustained energy level reflects a more overall feeling of vitality and energy release.

Age-Related Vitality

Deep inside each of our cells, tiny cellular "power plants" called mitochondria create the chemical energy that fuels our bodies. These organelles never sleep as they continuously deliver the energy molecule ATP (adenosine triphosphate), which powers our cellular processes. During the ageing process, the efficiency, size and number of our mitochondria declines and consequently influences the energy production. In order to keep our mitochondria efficient, it is important to understand how gene expression works.

Gene expression can be influenced through lifestyle choices as well as nutrition. With ageLOC® science we have an understanding of how YGCs influence mitochondrial ageing as the activity patterns of the YGCs are associated with this type of ageing. We are able to develop products that support the expression of these YGCs to help us feel and keep healthy. According to the latest scientific insights, we have been able to discover several potential ingredients that work on the expression of key gene groups associated with energy release. We can now identify, target and activate a specific YGC related to vitality.

Data suggests that nutrient efficacy varies by tissue; some nutrients work well in the muscle, while others work best in the brain. ageLOC® Vitality is formulated with a carefully selected blend of ingredients to provide you with vitality benefits in each of the three dimensions of vitality and inner energy release.
